Showing that Someone is Speaking

In written English, when someone speaks, we put inverted commas around what they say.

“My name is Lucy and I’m a superhero.”

What do you notice about where the inverted commas are and which way around they are?

Where to Place Inverted Commas

We only put “ ” around the words that the speaker actually says.

Can you use this rule to put inverted commas into these sentences?

- I'm tired, said Michael.
- Isabel called, Would you like to come for tea later?
- I whispered, Don't go any further.

Reporting Clauses

Either before or after the speech itself, a reporting clause is usually used to give a little bit of information about who is speaking and how it was said.

“What’s the matter, Dina?” said Sid.

reporting
clause

If the reporting clause is before the speech, it will end with a comma before the inverted commas open, e.g.

- Sophie shouted, “Stop annoying me!”

If the reporting clause is after the speech, no comma is required between the reporting clause and the inverted commas, e.g.

- “Stop annoying me!” shouted Sophie.

More Rules for Using Inverted Commas

A piece of speech in a sentence always starts with a capital letter, even if it begins in the middle of the sentence.

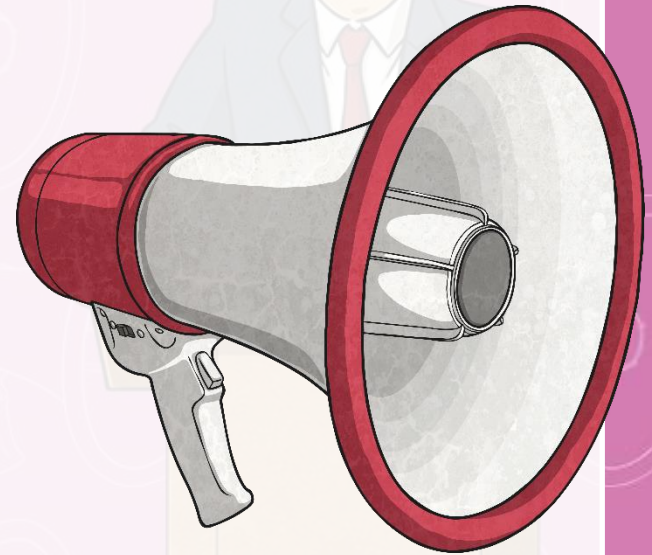

E.g. Emily sobbed, “Why did this happen?”

Separate what was said from the rest of the text with a comma, unless the speech needs a full stop, question mark or exclamation mark.

E.g. “That was interesting,” said Harriet.

“Ouch!” shouted Barry.

Put your inverted commas on the outside of any commas or full stops that you use.

What If More Than One Person Speaks?

If there is more than one speaker in your text, every time a new speaker speaks you will need to start a new paragraph.

For example:

“Are you okay?” Tom said, looking concerned.

“My knee really hurts,” answered Ben.

Review

To use inverted commas successfully you will need to:

- Only put “ ” around what the speaker actually says.
- Always start speech with a capital letter, even if it begins in the middle of the sentence.
- Separate what was said from the rest of the text with a comma, unless the speech needs a full stop, question mark or exclamation mark.
- Put your inverted commas on the outside of any commas or full stops that you use.
- Start a new paragraph if a new person starts to speak.
